NINE I. W. W. MEMBERS
GIVEN TERM IN PRISON
Tarrytown, N. Y., July 29.—In a court session, which lasted from 11 o'clock a. m. until 5:30 o'clock last evening, with only a brief recess for lunch, Justice of the Peace Moorhouse settled the account of Tarrytown against its I. W. W. and anarchist invaders. One by one the nine I. W. W. men were lined up before Justice Moorhouse, and, while their anarchistic sympathizers looked on, they were sentenced to 60 days each in the penitentiary. There originally were 12 prisoners, but two were killed in an explosion of a bomb in a Lexington avenue house, and it was deemed best not to try Becky Edelson, who has been on a hunger strike. The trials were marked, after the first two prisoners had received 60-day sentences, by bitter denunciation of Justice Moorhouse and District Attorney Weeks, who conducted the prosecution. Instead of standing trial the prisoners refused the services of Justus Sheffield, their lawyer, and asked that they be permitted to make speeches.

The speeches characterized Justice Moorhouse as "John D.'s puppet," but the justice showed no irritation at the names he was called, and at the conclusion of each speech he announced the usual 60-day sentence.

Becky Edelson was used as a witness. She had to be carried into the court room by a workhouse guard and a trained nurse, who had brought her in an automobile.
